

Responding with Compassion: Trauma-Informed Care for Older Adults across Cultures

Up to 90% of older adults have experienced at least one traumatic event in their lifetime. By integrating cultural sensitivity and humility into trauma-informed care practices, healthcare, social services, human services, and senior care providers can offer compassionate, effective, and person-centered support that recognizes the unique experiences of older adults across diverse cultural backgrounds. This approach not only promotes healing and recovery but also contributes to an overall inclusive and equitable care environment for older adults.
